

ABSTRACT

A high frequency switch is configured with two FET switches. One end of a second FET switch is connected between an I/O port and a reception port and the other end is ground. A strip line is connected between the second FET switch and the I/O port, and has an electrical length equivalent to $1/4$ wavelength of a high frequency signal input from a transmission port.